Genre Defying Night of Music at Music City San Francisco on Saturday, September 27

On Saturday, September 27, Music City San Francisco becomes home to a night that celebrates music without boundaries. From hip-hop to indie to rock, the evening unfolds with a lineup that showcases every corner of sound, bringing together artists who refuse to be boxed in.

Each artist brings something completely their own to the table. The night opens with the dark-pop sounds of Alicia Nicole, followed by the bright, warm tones of Kailnoa. Then, Memo and The Notebooks take the stage with a sound that defies categories, blending hip-hop, indie, emo, and R&B into something unpredictable and alive. To close it all out, A-1 delivers immaculate Hip-

“This show is about putting music first, no matter what shape it takes... It’s for people who just love music, period.”

Hop flows layered with powerful messages, making for a finale that hits just as hard in meaning as it does in rhythm.

Formed between San Jose and Santa Cruz, Memo and The Notebooks have grown from a university project into one of the region’s most dynamic live bands. Their shows feel personal, chaotic in the best way, and always full of character. They make the kind of night where nostalgia meets raw energy, and you can feel it, even all the way in the back of the room.
